Actions That Build Community
connect with others • build trust • get involved

Communities grow stronger when citizens regularly and persistently do a variety of simple things together that give them chances to connect with others, build trust and get involved in doing things together. The web of trusting relationships that grows from people sharing food, helping others with everyday tasks, and joining together to recognize, help, involve and entertain one another makes bigger joint ventures possible and strengthens resilience (go to www.hks.harvard.edu/saguaro/ to learn more).

This exploration identifies 75 different actions from a longer list prepared by a group of academic researchers and civic leaders who want to support the creation of what they call social capital (their label for networks of connection that build trust by involving people in one another’s lives and projects). This list is just a way to encourage thinking; it is not an instrument for research and many other actions will serve the purposes of connecting people, building trust, and involving people with one another. Use these pages to explore the current pattern of community building action from three different angles: the actions you and your family regularly engage in; the actions your organization actively supports people with developmental disabilities to take; and any service policies or practices that could make it harder for people with developmental disabilities to act as community builders.

People have different interests and gifts so actions that come easily to some might seem alien to others. What matters to the quality of community life is the number of people who regularly connect, build trust, and get involved with one another. There is more to overcoming social inclusion than taking actions like these, but these are good practices to build a stronger, more diverse foundation for our common life.
